A unique athletic event involving the University of California and Folsom prison is now in progress. The chess teams of the institutions are in the throes of a match by mail. About five moves have been made so far with the university team reported to be slightly in the lead. The captain of the prison team looks for a win, however, because authorities say it will take several years to bring the game to a conclusion and while the California team will lose a number of its seasoned players through graduation during that time, his own team will continue undisturbed. The law of compensation seems to be at work here.

Infringment of the rules of that organization costs members of the Kansas legislature a barrel of apples, the apples being passed around to all members and other persons admitted to the chamber. It is said that no one knows just when the custom started, but we venture to say it was on or about the date that Kansas went dry.

Have you ever noticed how cautiously motorists slide through a town that has the reputation of being tough on the speed demons and those inclined to be a trifle reckless of the lives of themselves and the ever-present innocent bystander? Sure you have. And you probably know how those towns acquire such reputations. For the benefit of any one who is not in the know, we'll tell you. They haul them in and a hardboiled but just judge says, "Fifty dollars and 30 days," or words to that effect, and the offender goes home poorer but wiser. Further, he is apt to tell his friends about it. Something like this: "Boy, soft pedal when you go through Bingleville! I oozed through that burg last week about 45 miles an hour—and they took me for 50 bucks. Tough? Plenty!" See how it's done? Simple, is it not? All it takes is a little co-operation between the "law" and the judiciary—and incidentally a bit of publicity—which usually takes care of itself.

That's all.

"Dictatorship, Red Or Black," Subject Of Sunday Lecture

Dr. Tully Knoles who addressed the Santa Clara County forum Sunday afternoon spoke at the Methodist church in Campbell in the evening, his subject being, "Dictatorship, Red or Black." In his inimitable scholarly way he sketched the rise of the communist ruling class of Russia and the present economic and social conditions in that country.

With the same clear-cut strokes he pictured conditions in Italy following the war and the meteoric career of Mussolini who has made himself dictator of his country with the backing of his fascist followers.

Dr. Knoles has such an unusual knowledge of current history in its various intertwinings and complications that it is a privilege to hear him and his comparison of these two forms of dictatorship was intensely interesting and worthwhile.

Election Of Officers Feature At Kiwanis Luncheon Tuesday

Election of officers was the principal business at the Kiwanis luncheon Tuesday. In order that each committee chairman might make his campaign speech, he was given an opportunity to tell of his wonderful works to the children of men—in other words, give a report. These reports gave evidence of considerable activity on the part of the club and its members for various community and organization benefits.

The house and program committees have been most faithful in the performance of their weekly duties and are deserving of particular commendation.

Secretary Ira Abbott gave the financial report showing conditions somewhat better than a year ago, following a busy year in which several hundred dollars were spent for community and charitable issues.

Election of officers resulted thus:

President, J. E. Wiesendanger; vice president, Ralph H. Hyde; trustee, Dr. W. I. Merrill; treasurer, Herold W. Morton; directors, Mark Purmort, Roy Archibald, Horace Gruwell, Guy Farley, Lou Shelley, Ben Curry, and Chauncy Whitman.

The next meeting will be held Tuesday evening as ladies' night, basket lunch picnic style. Wilbur S. Tupper of the Panama Mail Steamship company will give a lecture on the south seas, showing moving pictures of that interesting region.

Presentation Of Play By Seniors Saturday, Dec. 15

Work is progressing rapidly on the high school senior play which is to be given in the grammar school auditorium on the night of Dec. 15.

This year's selection, "The Family Upstairs," has met with the approval of countless audiences all over the country. It has been but recently placed in the amateur market.

The story, which is laid in New York, is a portrayal of everyday life and is pleasingly true to life. The daughter of the Heller family, which consists of Mr. and Mrs. Heller, Willie, the cake-eater son, Annabelle, the 12-year-old daughter, and Louise, the aforementioned daughter, has had few men friends during her life and when she does bring a young man—Charles Grant, a bank teller—to the home, Mrs. Heller does all that she can to gain favor with him. She talks up the good points of her daughter and the whole plot soon becomes entangled. The mother finds, too late, that the couple are already engaged. Louise is overcome with mortification at her mother's actions and breaks the engagement. The father, finally comes into his own after 23 years of watching the family ruling from the sidelines, and brings the play to a happy conclusion.

Virginia Harris plays the part of Louise, Willard Loughlin portrays Charles Grant, Robert Stubbe assumes the role of Mr. Heller and the part of Mrs. Heller is handled very ably by Margaret Emmer. Margaret Tutt promises to bid strongly for the outstanding role with the part of Annabelle. Frank Orlando is Willie, Clara Knopf is Mrs. Grant, Melvin De Selle is little Herbert Grant and Clara Rice handles the role of Mrs. Calahan. Miss Clara Bosch is directing the play.

T. M. Wright Picks County Committee

T. M. Wright, assemblyman from this district and father of the Wright enforcement act, has announced his county enforcement committee.

A relentless fighter of the booze rings, Mr. Wright is a "square shooter" and has selected this group regardless of politics, with a single aim in view—countywide enforcement of the dry law. Those who have stated their willingness to serve on this committee are:

Frank Abernathy of Saratoga, John Acton and Mrs. Laura Bortell of Morgan Hill, E. R. Kennedy of Campbell, the Rev. Hugh Hamilton and Miss Lucy Washburn of Los Gatos, the Rev. R. B. Cherrington and Mrs. Louise James of Palo Alto, Warren E. Hyde of Cupertino, Paul Clark and the Rev. W. E. Crouser of Willow Glen, C. W. Haman of Santa Clara, Prof. M. R. Kirkwood of Stanford University, Mrs. E. D. Minton of Mountain View, the Rev. M. M. Kilpatrick and A. A. Martin of Gilroy, A. T. Jones of San Martin, C. F. Crothers, J. D. Crumney, Mrs. E. L. De Arman, John A. Fair, Mrs. M. E. Hollingsworth, J. R. McChesney, the Rev. Channing Richardson and S. G. Thompkins of San Jose.

The integrity of the personnel is sufficient to inspire confidence, although Mr. Wright admits the possibility that his selections will not please everyone.

Music Program For Christmas

Plans are under way for a program of Christmas music in Campbell this year. A start was made in this direction last year when the evening school chorus sang carols near the Roosevelt redwood tree. It is planned to have the tree illuminated with colored lights again this year. The date set for the exercises is Friday evening, Dec. 21. The high school band will play some selections on the street and at the tree. Following this there will be a program of Christmas music and other features in the grammar school auditorium. It is hoped that the entire community will attend.

All persons who sing are invited to join the chorus. Rehearsals are held each Thursday evening at 7:30 o'clock at the high school.

Local Woman Found Dead; Flu-pneumonia

Mrs. N. E. Day was found dead in her home in Sunnyside Tuesday afternoon. An autopsy revealed death was caused by acute bronchial pneumonia.

Early Sunday morning Dr. F. R. Anderson was summoned to the house and left medicine for her to take as she then had a severe case of flu. She directed the doctor to notify her brother of her condition. The message was delivered but none of the family arrived until Tuesday when a sister, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Austin, entered the house.

Dr. Anderson was again called and summoned Coroner Williams.

Mr. Day went away last week on a business trip, stating he would return Wednesday. On his arrival home yesterday he was shocked to learn of the death of his wife.

The funeral was held today from the Hocking & Williams funeral parlors in San Jose.

Big Time In Store At Grange Fair And Dance

The Orchard City Grange is having a "country fair" in the IOOF hall in Campbell Dec. 8, to last all day and evening.

Some of the attractions are: Dinner and short orders at all hours. A fish pond for the kiddies, the country store for cheap groceries, home made candies, plenty of cooked foods and jellies, the ever-present white elephant where you will find just what you want, and of course "father's corner" where he has a chance to show his skill. The opportunity to get the desired Christmas gift of fancy work and basketry and plants or shrubs, and last but not least the chance of a lifetime to have your fortune told.

The dance in the evening will be held across the street in the social hall of the library with the Grange orchestra furnishing the music. Invitations to the dance can be secured from Grange members.

The committee in charge of the affair is S. N. Hedegard, Joe McKinnon, Calvin Bohnett, Loyd Gardner and Leo Hedegard.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Whitman were hosts Thanksgiving to Mr. and Mrs. B. Critchlow, of San Jose and Miss Lillian Christenson of Oakland.

Accidental Death, Verdict Returned, Coroner's Inquest

Coroner's inquest for the late Mary Sue Harris, 17, who was injured Nov. 24 in an automobile accident at Campbell and later died at O'Connor's sanitarium was held at the Melvin funeral parlors in Los Gatos Friday afternoon. A verdict of accidental death from fracture of the skull and laceration of the underlying brain tissue was returned.

Dr. W. I. Merrill, who was called to testify first, said he attended Miss Harris at O'Connor's. He said Henry R. Meklensek, known as Hank Roberts in pugilistic circles, driver of the machine, appeared to be "sober" that there were evidences of liquor on William Parr and Gus Dahlberg, other members of the party.

Dahlberg said the car was traveling at a rate of from 22 to 25 miles per hour when it crossed the railroad tracks at Campbell and just over the tracks the car swerved and lurched forward as if the steering apparatus had broken or a tire blown out. The machine hit a pole alongside the curb and penetrated through the store front of the Horace Lea grocery to the brick wall which forms a side of the building.

Dahlberg said the party was on its way to a chicken shack when the accident happened. Mrs. Laura Sproles, aunt of the deceased, told of visiting Miss Harris at the hospital where she did not regain consciousness.

Constable Frank Coupland and Night Patrolman George Barnes, who arrived at the scene shortly after the accident told of aiding the injured. Both said there was no liquor in the car and that the driver had not been drinking.

Coupland has filed a charge of reckless driving against Roberts in justice court of this village.

Funeral services for the young victim of the accident were held from the Melvin funeral parlors Dec. 1 at 10 o'clock a. m. and interment made in the Los Gatos cemetery. Miss Harris was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ahmed Harris, the sister of Denver Harris of Oakland, Emerson and Laura Harris of San Francisco, and Johnson, Bob and Pollyanna Harris of Los Gatos. She was a native of Tennessee.

Woman's Club Hear Interesting Book Reviews

Plans for Christmas occupied the business hour at the meeting of the Country Woman's Club this week. Ten dollars was voted from the club's personal fund toward the Christmas entertainment for the veterans in the hospitals at Palo Alto, Letterman and Marine.

Mrs. Horace Person and Mrs. F. H. Cutting were asked to assist the committee for the Christmas meeting Dec. 17, which is a guest day. At this time members and guests are asked to bring toys to be sent to the Indian children and clothing for Indian girls who want to go to the city to work.

The program was in charge of Mrs. Leigh Saunders and Mrs. E. E. Pomeroy. The latter gave a most interesting account of the author of "Empress of Hearts" D. E. Barrington, who has written a number of novels under that name, and an entirely different style of oriental tales under the pseudonym of L. Adams Beck. The story chosen is one woven about the ill-fated Marie Antoinette of France and the diamond necklace that figured in her downfall, and Mrs. Pomeroy very skillfully gave just enough of the story to arouse interest.

San Jose Youth Crashes Gate At Local Water Plant

Last week in Campbell there occurred a crash accurate details of which were not at hand as the paper went to press. Reports advise that Bobby Riordan, San Jose youth, failed to make the turn at the intersection of South First street and Rincon avenue. He was proceeding down the latter thoroughfare at a high rate of speed, and crashed through the Campbell Water company's fence, narrowly missing a tree as his heavy coupe left the road.

It is reported he was accompanied by a young woman whose name is being withheld.

Riordan evaded arrest at the hands of Officers Barnes and Coupland and has not yet been apprehended, according to reports, although Attorney Rankin of San Jose later appeared before Judge Blaine in behalf of Riordan to plead guilty to reckless driving as charged on the warrant sworn out by Barnes. A fine of $25 was imposed.

I. Merrill as Knecht Ruprecht, his black servant; Helen Stray as Mrs. John Bull, an English lady traveling in Holland; Polly Maxon and Joan Whitehouse as Alice and Beatrice, her daughters; Elin and Elba Swanson as bad fays; Ruth Townsend as a fairy queen. Soloists, Annette Merrill, Elsie Swanson and Dr. W. I. Merrill.

On the program there will also appear Beverly Davis in a clog dance.

cook, "Black Majesty," the story of the life of a negro who made himself ruler of the island of Haiti in its earlier history.

Ruth Comfort Mitchell's latest book, "Army With Banners," was the book chosen by Mrs. C. H. Whitman and her review and comments were very comprehensive and interesting.

The "Life of Mussolini" proved an interesting choice as handled by Mrs. Saunders who is a well-read student of history, past and current, and has the ability to present it entertainingly. The paragraphs read gave glimpses of a real treat in store.

John D. Blaine Family United Thanksgiving

The J. D. Blaine home was the scene of a happy gathering for the holiday week-end. All of the family were together except George who is making an ocean trip on one of the Dollar liners. Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Jamison and daughter of Berkeley, Miss Margaret of Oakland and Miss Laura of Gilroy were present.

Grateful for the stop in between floors Lolita fought for composure while the annunciator in the car registered the angry calls for the elevator upon half a dozen floors. She wiped her eyes and tried to make herself presentable. Presently she managed to nod at the young man and he started the car down again.

On the main floor she hurried out of the lobby, dreadfully conscious that she was leaving all this dear and familiar atmosphere of friendly smells and railings that bore the signs of wear of two generations of students, for the last time.

When she reached her room she dared not stop to think. One thing beat itself into her consciousness. She must make herself pretty again. She could no longer stand it to see her ugly ensemble in the glass. At least if she had nothing else, she had youth and beauty; why not make the most of them?

Standing in the middle of the floor she pulled off her clothes, and, slim and pink, ran to the bath. For an hour she splashed around in the tub, a little comforted—as long as she refused to think—by the caress of warm water upon her body. Meticulously she soaked every vestige of dye out of her hair and then climbed out of the bathtub. Her things had come from the store and she went into the next room and unpacked them. It was good to draw on soft, filmy underthings, feel the kiss of virgin silk upon her limbs. Dressing only in the frilly under garments she pirouetted before the long cheval glass on the back of the closet door for several moments. In the frothy black silk underthings, and pink, flesh-colored stockings, she knew, perfectly well, as she looked in the glass, that she looked tremendously sweet. If Mr. Warrill could see her now! And yet, she didn't want him to. He wouldn't be really loving her, it would be something else unpretty, like poor Harvey!

Donning the new dress, she sat before the mirror and carefully massaged, applied with restraint all of the old cosmetics that she had been accustomed to, as which she had eschewed since the death of Harvey, rubbed brilliantine into her hair, combed it out carefully and curving it at the ends in front, so that a thick curl of it upon each side warily tickled her cheek. Even she was amazed at the different girl who, at last, appeared in the mirror.

For several moments she sat, chin upon knit fingers, elbows upon the dresser top, surveying herself. She was pretty, startlingly so, and delightfully young, and that was all that was left to her. Her father had said that she might never come home. Mr. Warrill would probably never speak to her again. It was the continuation of her punishment for what she had done. She realized now that all of the gaiety which she had affected while dressing had been put on, and now that there was no more dressing to be done, clouds of memories were rolling up upon her, threatening every moment, to break over her in a storm. She had tried to be good; had tried to start over as Gertrude had suggested. It hadn't worked. Why, then, go on crying? When she had done what she had, there was no forgiveness; why then try to earn it? Why not just go on, since there was nothing else left to live for? Defiantly she rose and stood by the window looking out. The big white sign of the Montmartre cafe she could see from the back; she caught a glimpse of the red and gold sign full of rippling lights upon the Uptown theater; a little to the left the Riviera sign; there was, she knew, a new cafe over there; she had over a hundred dollars which she had received from the store that afternoon, as change from her check.

"The devil with this 'beating back' stunt," she said at last aloud to herself. She opened the door and passed into the hall, determined to run away from the storm, whose clouds were getting blacker and blacker with each passing moment.

As she descended the stairs she was vaguely conscious that some one below had just finished a conversation with Mrs. Hardy and was starting up the stairs. On the landing she came face to face with Mr. Warrill. She stopped in amazement directly in his path.

"Pardon me," he said, "but I was in search of Miss—er—Forbes. I wonder if—"

"I'm her sister," cut in Lolita; "she's not up there." I was going to see her myself, but she's apparently gone out for the evening. What, may I ask, if it's not a wholly impertinent question, did you want to see her about?"

"Well," temporized Warrill, "nothing in particular. I just wanted to ask her if certain things were true. I guess it doesn't matter, though."

"Probably not," said Lolita, crisply. "I'd have known you were her sister even if you hadn't told me," went on Mr. Warrill, fingering his hat. "You are exactly like her in lots of ways; but very different in others." His admiration fairly gleamed from his eyes. Somehow this revolted her. Without a word she hurried on down the stairs, leaving him standing there looking after her. She was more determined than ever now to forget all about the redemption thing that Gertrude had preached but not practiced. She didn't want Mr. Warrill's regard now, even though she could see that she might have it. It wouldn't be worth the having. It was only for the outside of her, the new outside of her. He was just like all other men. There was nothing good or fine or worth having in the world. Outside she turned resolutely, with a final mental toss that caused a physical toss of the head, firmly toward the new cafe.

CHAPTER VI

Walking along, with her head down, her mind a wild kaleidoscope of scorn and hopelessness, Lolita suddenly heard a voice close at hand.

"Hell, girlie!" sang out a boy's cheerful voice. Almost without thinking she turned and replied:

"Hello."

She saw a young fellow of perhaps twenty-five at the wheel of a sport coupe; evidently he had seen her from the road, scudded along as she walked, and taken advantage of the first open parking space along the curb to drive in and call to her.

"Going any place in particular?" next asked the youth.

"No, no place in particular," responded Lolita in a dull tone; she was thinking idly, that he was good looking, happy looking, as though he hadn't a trouble in the world.

"Hop into the car," he suggested, "and we'll both go no place in particular." Without a word of remonstrance she climbed into the car.

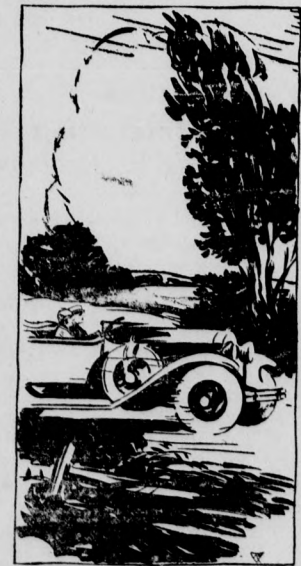

At once he swung the automobile about and started back. Then he suddenly turned to her.

"The whole trouble with you," he now pronounced airily, "is that you probably don't drink enough." Lolita looked at him in astonishment as he went on. "Yeh, that must be it; you probably don't drink enough. I noticed how d—n blue you looked. Me? Say, I drink plenty, and I always feel fine; I'm heading for the Goose and Gander, and what's good for both. Care?"

"What is the Goose and Gander?" asked Lolita.

"A road house, nine miles out. Swell place. Nobody has ever been able to remember what they were blue about five minutes after they got inside."

"All right," agreed Lolita, caring little what happened to her. After all, what difference did anything make? She had done her level best to redeem herself, she had failed in every particular; there was nothing left to do, the mistake that she had made would never be forgiven. She had often wondered, previous to making it, why girls who made one false step always kept on going downward; it seemed so silly, when all that they needed do was to "Turn to the Right," and start over again. Now she understood.

She was grateful that her companion did not speak to her. She just wanted to sit and half think about almost nothing and watch the night and the lights off in the field in farmhouses rush by and hear the chorus of the crickets, so loud that it sounded above the noise that the car made. Almost she began to feel a little happy.

Presently the car stopped before an old house that looked as though it were sadly in need of repairs. It was perfectly dark, but as she looked about she saw that dozens of other cars, with all of their lights out were parked around near the ramshackle old frame building.

"Come on," prompted her companion, after he had found a parking place and switched off his lights. She allowed him to assist her from the car. They walked up a short flight of steps, opened a rickety door and passed into a darkened hallway. Her companion, holding her arm, pushed her forward. Another door opened and suddenly a burst of music fairly leaped out at them; a blaze of light met them, and, almost before she knew it, Lolita was dancing with her escort.

When the music stopped, and he led her to a seat, she felt almost light-hearted and gay. The place, inside, was a miracle of beauty and perfection, completely giving the lie to the exterior. Well dressed, jolly people were everywhere about. Laughter and happiness seemed literally to saturate everything.

"Something," specified her escort when a waiter approached, "that's good for the Goose and good for the Gander." The waiter nodded and walked off. Presently he was back with what looked like water in two small glasses; but, upon sipping it, Lolita discovered at once that it was quite anything but water. It was more like fire than water. She coughed and choked. Her escort laughed.

"Like all good medicine," he said, "it's a little hard to take, but, oh boy, it will fix you up fine. Me? I'm going to get liquored up a little, if you don't mind." He tossed off his gin without so much as a wry face and ordered more.

In The Soup

WE have all heard of the little boy who said that "soup is a little bit of everything and not much of anything." If one is thinking of a soup similar to the French pot-au-feu, the first part of the boy's statement is true, but the second is certainly a mistake. A soup made with milk or cream has a definite food value and is an excellent way to induce children who dislike milk to take it. It will give a certain "fillingness" to an otherwise light meal. And its tempting color and consistency will give a fillip to the appetite.

Easy Variations

The vegetable soups, on the other hand, are not so high in food value from a caloric standpoint, but they are rich in vitamins and minerals, and their appetizing flavor will stimulate a languid appetite. Making soup for a meal is an easy part of the menu's preparation, too.

For instance, it is easy to keep a can of beef bouillon on your shelf. Then if there are any buttered vegetables such as beans, peas, celery, left-over from the last meal, they can be heated in the soup to give it a different and intriguing flavor. A soup that is delicious and that may easily be varied is tomato bouillon with mushrooms. Stew one quart can of tomatoes, two cups water, liquor from one can of mushrooms, one and one-fourth teaspoons salt, and one teaspoon paprika for five minutes. Add two bouillon cubes, dissolve, then strain mixture. Add two slightly beaten egg whites and their crushed shells. Boil one minute. Let stand half an hour to settle, then strain through double cheesecloth. Add one-half cup chopped mushrooms sautéed in two tablespoons butter and reheat but do not boil. Almost any other vegetable may be substituted for the mushrooms.

He is survived by his wife, a son, Werner J., and a daughter, Zelda I. The family is well known to many former students of the high school and members of the P. T. A. in which Mrs. Raab was an enthusiastic worker while her children attended and graduated from the local school.

GRANGE NOTES

The Grange was well attended last Tuesday evening. Leroy Anderson told how the Grange started the reapportionment movement four years ago, and other orders falling in line carried the movement through to completion at the recent election.

W. Parker gave an interesting and instructive talk on spraying for insect enemies and fungus diseases on fruit trees, recommending a combination of bordeaux and oil. For dead buds on apricots it should be put on as early as November for best results.

The Orchard City orchestra under the direction of Calvin Bohnett gave several very pleasing selections.

Lt. W. J. Enig of San Jose was introduced and gave an interesting talk on traffic laws and regulations. He told us there were 32,000,000 autos in the United States, 2,000,000 in California and 20,000 in Santa Clara county and that every other minute a child was killed, that 60 per cent of the accidents were due to ignorance and that every day an average of 100 autos were stolen in California, largely due to the fact that cars were not locked when parked. He urged people not only to lock their cars but never to leave overcoats or other belongings in open cars as many things were stolen from such cars. Brakes are the most essential part of a car and should be carefully tested every day. No muffler cut-outs to be operated from the inside of the car are to be allowed after Jan. 1. No bicycle should ever be on the road after dark without lights, as the lack of them is often the cause of serious accidents.

Do not double park in San Jose. There are eight or ten places where autos can be parked for 15 cents. When an accident

Goodrich Builds Tires For All, Says Mr. Grattan

Modern tire needs have developed the greatest in the tire history oped a variety in tires which is according to Mr. Grattan, dealer in Goodrich tires here. Nowadays one may buy a tire that is the last word in tire luxury and extensive performance; and one may buy a tire of less quality to keep the old bus shod until time to trade it in for a new car.

"Our line," said Mr. Grattan, "contains tires to fit every purse and need and every tire presents good value. You wouldn't plaster your garage and decorate it with the same expensive decorations as your living room. Neither would you buy an expensive and luxurious tire to put on a car you intend to run only a comparatively short time. Then some people prefer to buy tires at less money."

"One of three great evils of the lower priced tire is that of a very poorly made tire offered for sale on a price basis only. To the trade these tires are known as 'gyp' tires. Manufacturers who must look well to their integrity cannot afford to endanger their good names by misrepresenting tire values. When we sell a lower priced tire we are frank in explaining the limitations of that tire."

"On new cars it is best to use the best tires that can be bought. Speed is a matter of course today. Speeding on uncertain tires is dangerous. Lives have been lost and people have been seriously injured by the explosion of some tire that was not what it was represented to be. Such well known brands as the Silvertown are assurance against the danger of such accidents. If one uses lower priced tires it is best to drive accordingly."
